

Sun, Sea & Socrates: great learning breaks

Photo by Laura Fowler

WORLDWIDE PHOTOGRAPHY HOLIDAYS

The life of a travel photographer is an enviable one, though they'll try to tell you it's hard work, too.

Photography courses take place in almost every exotic location in the world. They range from weekend breaks in the UK to two-week expeditions that include photographing the earth from a hot-air balloon while flying over the North Pole. Whatever your budget, there should be a course to help you improve your photography skills. At the very least, your holiday snaps will be the best they've ever been. Here are seven of our favourite, from the Arctic to Zanzibar.

Closer to home in Devon, photographer Sarah Howard runs a weekend workshop at the beachside Shell House. Howard will take you out to locations across Exmoor and teach you how best to capture the diverse scenery, from coast to moorlands.

From £510 per person, including two days of professional tuition, transfers, three nights' B&B, dinner on Friday night and lunches on Saturday and Sunday. Next trip starts 30 March 2012.

For more information or to book contact Sheepskin (01865 764087; www.sheepskinlife.com)